Carl had a very difficult time telling the truth. He didn't want to lie but sometimes it just happened. He just couldn't help it! Carl was known to be very dishonest.

One day, Carl dropped his homework in a puddle on the way to school and it was all wet and soggy. When it was time to turn homework in, he explained to his teacher Mrs. Joyce, what happened. She didn't believe him because Carl often lied about not doing his homework. She assumed this was just another lie he was telling her.

Carl was embarrassed and disappointed his teacher didn't believe him. He vowed to himself that he would work harder to be more honest in the future.

Mia dreaded getting up in the morning. She was known in her family to be very grumpy. She snapped at her brother, glared at her sister and refused to talk to her parents. Mia was hard to be around in the morning. Her family did everything they could to avoid her in the mornings so they didn't get the brunt of her bad attitude.

One Sunday, she was even more grumpy than usual. Her brother asked her to pass the cereal and she snapped at him, "Get it yourself!" Her brother started to cry and ran to his room.

Mia's mom told her she understood mornings were hard for her but it was not okay to talk to her family that way. Mia felt bad and said sorry to her brother. She made an effort to be more pleasant in the mornings.

Raj was very generous. He was always thinking about how he could help others. He volunteered at the shelter on the weekends, donated clothes he no longer wore and mowed his elderly neighbor's yard in the summer time. He was especially generous with his friends. If his friends needed something, Raj was always willing to give it to them, no questions asked.

One day at lunch, Raj noticed his friend Alex didn't have a lunch. Raj asked Alex about it and Alex said he forgot his lunch at home. Without even thinking about it, Raj took half of his lunch and gave it to Alex. Alex was thankful he had a generous friend like Raj.
